release date oct. 2013 the only difference is that it has the black cam inside with the black screen around it. You can use the calendar widget to date a shot. - The date and time is based on your gps location (real time) and your location on a map (looking up the location from a map). - There is also the ability to choose different date ranges, as well as to expand the time frame to a time span of X years in the future. - The date and time can be also locked. - You can define some settings (limit the range, minimum and maximum days, minimum and maximum times). - The information can be viewed by the user to review the events. but as soon as i open the folder it tells me that there is an invalid registry key or corrupt files, then closes and i can't even close the folder. if i try to force quit it then i get a msg saying that it can't because another program is using the gps. any suggestions? thanks in advance there is so much issues and bugs around, and none of them work. if u have not tried to find a new clock yet, then go and do so. i use gps on my 3gis and all works very well, if u have the same problem you might wanna read this post to see if ur problem can be solved by using the software. We're always looking for feedback to help us improve. This application is still in BETA, and is free for now. We're still testing and fixing bugs and features. We will announce when it's ready for public download. i tried this program on my 2gis but it didn't work.it says "timer program error" and "program has encountered a problem,do you want to report it?" but i still can't close it. pls help, thank you.Q: Cannot update gpx file, I get an 'Invalid ZIP Format' error I'm trying to update the gpx file that I created with the following command: gpsbabel -i gpx -f gpx -o gpx -s The command is run in a script and the whole script seems to run correctly. The only problem is that the gpx file is not updated. I'm using Ubuntu 16.04 and gpsbabel (v2.3.3) is installed. 82157476af
